

Watching It Fly Free blog #18

When I became an entrepreneur I had no idea just how much I would grow. Worlds that would not have been open to me became accessible.

At age 34, I was afforded an opportunity of a lifetime... a Corporate Director appointment on the board of a Regional Financial Institution. This would never have happened if I were still sitting inside Corporate America. It was because I decided to no longer let my light be hidden so that I could "fit in." I let it fly free and the right person was watching and followed through.

Doors open for you because you let go the string attached to that balloon. I held onto that so called job because I thought it was what I was supposed to do, but when I opened my eyes and saw what awaited me in the world, no the universe, I released and never looked back. The universe has become my playground versus just the block in which I lived. We as women have the ability to FLY FREE more than we realize. But quite often we hold on and watch it deflate because you are waiting for permission to ask for "fresh air" (aka Opportunities).

Have you released your balloon to fly free? Where is the breeze taking your balloon as it flies free.

"It's ok to let go of the string and watch it fly free. It is your step toward reaching for new heights in your own life... and bigger toys."
