

Fitting the Mold

She Talkx

Blog #12 - "Finding Our Voice(s)
"Being referred to at times as "Different" or "Special" can be limiting...

Being a free spirit and independent thinker often times kept me in a zone that was different from the rest of the crowd. But it has helped to shape the woman that I have become. As opposed to being called strange, I am now Unique, seasoned and let's not forget Trailblazer.

My "no fear" attitude has been the key to not getting caught in the web of status quo. As I am sure that you too have these kinds of stories to tell like the "In Circles" are confused about how you achieved your credentials and success when they are still trying to figure out the right formula, or you walk with confidence even though your world is crumbling. Your complexion and the texture of your hair or your "accent" is not the normal uniform that is seen in the halls you walk through with confidence and pride.

Well, make that part of your success as you show them that your experiences are just meant as that training ground you need for that greatness that awaits. It truly raises the level of your value proposition.

"...I prefer to be defined as CREATIVELY LIBERATED!!!. It fits my personality much better."